CLEAN SWEEP FOR REPUBLICANS IN THE COUNTY WITH BUT ONE EXCEPTION

Monessen Gives Candidates On Republican Ticket Big Lead

A telephone message received from Republican headquarters in Greensburg at 1 o'clock, with 152 districts heard from gave Judge McConnell a lead of 1,228 votes over Shaw, and from all indications, this lead will be increased when the reports from the missing districts come in. In the same districts Kilgore, the Democratic nominee for Sheriff, had a lead of 2,000 over Shields. In 113 districts Hamel had a lead of 200 over Reamer for County Commissioner, but when the Monessen and Parnassus district were heard from, Reamer was given a big lead and his election is assurred. The other succesful men for the office of County Commissioner are George Deeds and Berkey H. Boyd. The remainder of the Republican ticket is elected by safe majorities.

Westmoreland county voted a split ballot yesterday which resulted in a Republican victory with the exception of one or two instances. John E. Shields, the Republican nominee, is likely defeated by John Kilgore, and the fight for commissioner between Dick Reamer and Herman Hamel is close. Berkey Boyd and George Deeds were elected county commissioners. John Sell won for controller over his opponent, James E. Bell. Dr. A. D. Miller wins for county treasurer over his Democratic opponent, Harry S. Miller for Recorder and Edward Cremer for Register of Wills and Dr. James Harkins for Coroner.

Judge A. D. McConnell wins out on the non-partisan ballot over Geo. B. Shaw by from 1,000 to 1,500 votes. All of the Republican nominees won in every precinct in. Monessen by a safe lead, regardless of the fact that there were few straight ballots cast. The Woman suffrage amendment was victorious in the town by two votes but its defenders claim a victory in the county by about 300. The tabulated vote in the several wards follow:

The world's greatest comedian with the world's greatest company, L KO, Billie Ritchie visits the Olympic today in "Room and Board a Dollar and a Half" in two reels. L KO comedies are the funniest in the world. Under Pathe Lehrman's directing genius,these clever comedians such as Billie Ritchie, Louise Orth, Gene Rogers, Gertrude Selby, Ray Griffith, Peggy Pearce and Alice Howells are funniest beyond all questions, so far superior in settings. situations, wardrobes, properties, photography and every other element that makes quality pictures that they are without any comparison. They are always new, novel, better staged, better acted, have more laugh punches, more comic screams.—Today at the Olympic. 1t

SUFFRAGE LOST

The voters of Pennsylvania defeated woman suffrage yesterday. It was in Philadelphia that the amendment received its most decisive rejection, the number of persons to vote "no," giving the antis a chance to claim the state by a quarter of a million before midnight. Pittsburgh and Allegheny county treated the question kindly, as did a great many counties in the western end of the state; but the majority rolled up in Philadelphia discounted the gains made elsewhere.

In Allegheny county 424 out of the 778 election districts gave 25,354 for the amendment and 29,376 against.

Under the constitution, the question of woman suffrage cannot come before the people again for five years.

When it is noted that the ratio against woman suffrage in downtown Philadelphia was almost 10 to 1, some idea may be gained of the obstacle the rural centers, where the most "yes" votes were cast, had to overcome.

Returns to be received today may alter the situation. This is borne out when scattering returns taken at random from districts having populations entirely opposed in their beliefs and prejudices. In practically every type of community, the suffrage amendment ran a good race, although it did not gain enough to offset the negation of the great centers of population.

Twenty-four districts in Luzerne county gave 689 for and 499 against the amendment. The voters here have different interests from those of Armstrong county where 612 votes wer cast for 598 against, in a limited area. Five in Cambria, gave 304 in favor and 306 against. In Clarion, three districts, 90 favored and 52 opposed. Thirteen districts of Warren gave 830 for and442 against. In Lycoming, another sort of county industrially, eight districts gave 74 yes ballots and 168 noes. Getting another angle on the situation, it is found that 301 districts outside of the large cities gave 11,233 votes for and 13,778 against. The votes in the cities apparently turned the scales. Westmoreland county voted "yes" by over 300.

Give Him a Chance

Ten years ago in Chicago three youth were hanged. They were the famous "bar barn bandits." All under 21—mere boys—but the state took their lives as penalty for the trail of crime they had blazed. The execution over, a little care worn woman came down the steps of the county jail. She was Mrs. Sophie Van Dine, mother of Harvey Van Dine, one of the bandits. She had just seen him hanged. As she reached the sidewalk she stopped and said, "My boy did not have a chance. Work forced me to leave him alone most of the day. Disease and bad surroundings made a criminal of him. It's over now, but I'm going to devote the rest of my life to saving other boys.'

Today you can find her working in one of Chicago's municipal hospitals. In the ward for defectives. They call it the "horror" ward. Working among babies and children whose minds are diseased and deformed, because they were born with diseased, deformed bodies. Innocent victims of poverty, disease, vice. As their bodies heal and grow strong, Mrs. Van Dine works that their mind may heal and grow strong. That they may grow up healthy, normal human beings instead of criminals and murderers. Isn't there a lesson in this? Think it over. Then in your own way, and amid your own surroundings, do your share to make this a better world. Fight all three so that not only your own children but some other mother's boy will have a chance

Really Accommodating.

"A cyclone is not such a bad thing, after all," remarked the portly salesman as he settled himself comfortably in his chair. "One saved $5 for me once"

"How did it happen?" asked a lounger.

"I was in a little town about two years ago and wanted to get to another small town fifteen miles distant. There was no railroad between the two points, and I was standing in front of the livery stable arguing with the liveryman, who wanted $5 to take me and my sample cases over when a cyclone came along and, picking me up, landed me right in the little town to which I wanted to go."

"Er—how about your sample cases?" faltered an awed listener.

"Oh," suavely replied the salesman, "the cyclone landed them just ahead of me and had my goods all spread out on display when I got there!"—New York Times.

Criminals and Clews.

Pierre Jaune, the French detective, once traced a murderer within forty-eight hours with no clew save a trouser button. Such a feat seems almost incredible, yet many criminals have been brought to justice through clever minds following up the very slightest clews.

Suspicion was first awakened in the Crippen case by the spelling of the victim's name, "Elmore," with two "l's" on a forged letter. Bennett, of Yarmouth notoriety, was traced through a laundry mark on a piece of linen, and Orrocks, who murdered a constable at Dalston in 1884, was brought to the scaffold by an initial on a chisel.

So, if you want to be a criminal you had better go out naked and unarmed. Even then some special constable might take note of you—London Chronicle.

Bulls and Blunders.

Many years ago I heard the following notice read out in a church in England: "There will be a procession next Sunday afternoon, but if it rains in the afternoon the procession will take place in the morning'

Among mixed metaphors the most delightful I think I have ever heard was the statement of a town councilor in a Hampshire town some years ago during a discussion on projected expenditure on town improvements. "Gentleman." he said, "we will have nothing to do with it, it is but the thin end of a white elephant."

A distinguished leader of the Ulster party, writing to me, said, "Before the home rule bill is enforced Asquith will have to walk over many dead bodies—his own included."—London Spectator.

A Resident Known to all our Readers Relates an Experience

Readers of the Independent have been told again and again of the merits of that reliable, time-proved kidney remedy—Doan's Kidney Pills. The experiences told are not those of unknown persons, living far away. The cases are Monessen cases, told by Monessen people.

Mrs. R. Gilmour, 102½ First street, Monessen, says: "I suffered for years from a lame back and often when I stooped, the misery was so intense that I cried aloud. If I moved suddenly, it seemed as if something snapped in my back. When I exerted myself in sweeping or doing housework, the pain was unbearable. I felt tired and listless all the time and my head ached. My eyes were affected and I was all worn out. I consulted several doctors but none of them seemed to do me any good, and finally I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. A few boxes made me quite well. Others of the family used Doan's Kidney Pills as a kidney tonic and think highly of them."

MRS. THOMSON TELLS WOMEN

How She Was Helped During Change of Life by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I am just 52 years of age and during Change of Life I suffered for six years terribly. I tried several doctors but none seemed to give me any relief. Every month the pains were intense in both sides, and made me so weak that I had to go to bed. At last a friend recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to me and I tried it at once and found much relief. After that I had no pains at all and could do my housework and shopping the same as always. For years I have praised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for what it has done for me, and shall always recommend it as a woman's friend. You are at liberty to use my letter in any way."—Mrs. THOMSON, 549 W. Russell St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Change of Life is one of the most critical periods of a woman's existence. Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to carry women so successfully through this trying period as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A Battle Within a Battle

By M QUAD

Copyright, 1915 by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate

Our battery had been doing splendid service. From our position on the right we could see the shells drop into the woods and break up the formation of the Confederate cavalry every time they left cover.

We knew where they were. Jeb Stuart's old troopers were there: Wade Hampton's dragoons were there—Imboden, Rosser, Mosby—every Confederate cavalry command we had fought in Virginia was making ready in the shelter of the woods to charge on our left flank.

"Boom! Boom! Boom!"

The gunners knew what was at stake. The orders were to die at the guns if the position could not be held. For half an hour their bursting shells kept the front clear, and we of the cavalry cheered them.

Out from the cover of the forest at half a dozen places gallop the gray troopers by hundreds. They wheel to the right and left, form in two lines, take their distance, close up with a trembling motion, and now there will be a grand charge. The shells burst in front of them, among them, but discipline is stronger than the fear of death.

Less than 300 of us—all cavalry—to support the battery. If that mob of gray riders ever reaches the foot of the slope we shall be picked up and sent whirling like dry leaves in a hurricane. The fire of the six guns becomes more rapid. It is truly terrible, but in their haste the gunners do less execution.

Just 278 of us by actual count as we dress in two ranks. What are we going to do?

"Draw sabers! Forward! Trot! Gallop! Charge!"

They are driving us down at that body of men—ten times our number—to break and check the charge. If we can stop them for ten minutes the battery will be saved by the infantry. We oblique to the left as we go to close up. We are a living wedge, driving down to enter a living mass and split it in twain.

The wedge enters. The wedge drives ahead over fallen horses and dismounted men, yelling, slashing, cutting, keeping their pace. A trooper slashes at me, a horse goes down in front of mine, I feel myself falling with my horse, and then I am out of the light for a moment.

The darkness which enshrouded things passes away after a bit, and I and my horse lying across my feet with the saddle flap so holding him that his dead body must be lifted up to get me out.

The charge of the gray troopers was broken. That wedge drove right through the mass and turned to attack them in the rear. Swirling about in circles like the vulture of war, the mass of men edges away until the field about me is clear of all but the dead and wounded. I've got a saber cut on the shoulder and can feel the warm blood bathing my arm, but I know I could walk away if I could get my feet clear. I am working to extricate them when I hear hoofbeats behind me. The next moment a riderless horse dashes up and comes to a halt. He has not been hit, but he has left his rider dead back there in the stubble, a Federal captain.

The horse stands pawing and snorting when out from the whirl of death, half a mile away, breaks a chestnut charger and comes galloping down upon us. There is blood on the saddle flaps—drops of blood on his shiny flanks. It is not his blood, but that of the Confederate man who rode him, and who has been cut down by a stroke of the saber.

It is gray versus chestnut—Federal versus Confederate. The newcomer is still a hundred feet away, when the gray horse rushes at him with ears laid back and mouth open, and as I watch them I forget that shells are screaming, bullets whistling and the saber doing bloody work within sound of my voice. As the two horses come together they rear up, neigh defiance at each other and a fight begins—a battle within a battle. Each seems embued with a deadly hatred for the other, and to be determined to destroy his antagonist.

Of a sudden I realize that they are close upon me. In their mad fury they see neither dead nor wounded—hear not the shout and shot of battle.

The gray kicks a dead man aside as he backs up for a fresh effort; the chestnut tramples the life out of a wounded man as he dances about. They will be over me if I do not stop them. The heels of the gray are throwing dirt into my face as I unsling my carbine and rest it across my dead horse for a shot. I fire at the gray, as he is the nearer and the greater menace, but the bullet misses the target. At that moment they begin to work to the left, and in the next they are past me, leaping over dead horses and tramping on dead men as they scream and bite and kick.

Above the roar of battle I hear a rifle shell coming. It gives out a growling, complaining sound which no man ever hears without a chill. The sound grows louder — nearer — crash! The horses were fifty feet away, and it must have struck one of them. There was a cloud of smoke, a whizzing of ragged fragments, and when I could see again both horses were down—torn and mangled and almost blotted off the face of the earth by the awful force of the explosion.

BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a Harmless Substitute

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets.

These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does, but have no bad after effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids.

It is best not to take calomel, but to let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place.

Most headaches, "dullness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "loggy" and "heavy." Note how they "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. All druggists.

A Notary's Discomfiture

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Many years ago in the city of Rheims, in France, which has of late been the scene of fighting between the French and the Germans, there lived an old notary. In France a notary is a lawyer, but in the olden time a lawyer was not of much more importance so far as his work was concerned than a notary is with us today. Jules Farlieux, the notary of Rheims, had accumulated some 50,000 francs, which had come to him through small fees. This sum—$10,000 in our money—was quite a fortune in those days, especially in France, where everything was very cheap and one could live comfortably on a small income.

The old man had one child, a daughter, Delphine, to whom he expected to leave his property, and it was his expectation that she should marry a man having at least an equal amount. What was his chagrin, therefore, when he learned that she had fallen in love with Alphonse Du Bois, a young fellow who had just been graduated from a law school in Paris and settled in Rheims to practice his profession without a sou to his name. The notary simply forbade his daughter to have anything to do with the man.

One day three men came into Jules Farlieux's office, and after asking if and being assured that he was the "distinguished notary" with whom so many persons intrusted their affairs and their moneys they asked him to take care of 100,000 francs in gold which was theirs jointly. Jules accepted the trust, it being agreed that he should deduct 5 per cent of the amount when the money was returned. He was then asked to draw up a contract to that effect, in which he stipulated to pay over the money to the three men together and not to any one or two of them separately. The contract having been signed, the men departed, leaving the gold on a table. As the notary was gathering it up to put in his strong box one of the men returned, saying he had been deputed by the others to count the money before it was put away. While he was doing so a stranger came hurriedly into the office and, after taking the notary into a rear room, asked him some questions concerning a matter which he seemed to consider of immediate importance. The notary tried to get away from him, but found it impossible. When he was permitted to return to the other room both the money and the man who had been counting it were gone.

Farlieux found himself in a very unpleasant position. He had receipted for 100,000 francs which he was to pay to the three owners together. One of them had taken the amount, and the notary would be obliged to indemnify the others, which would require nearly double all he possessed. He heard nothing from any of the men for a month, then one morning the two who had lost their share came to him and demanded it.

The notary believed that the men had conspired to swindle him, but unless he could prove this he had no hope of saving the little fortune he had been a lifetime in accumulating and which was to go to his daughter for a dowry. He made every effort to prove that the men were dishonest and in collusion, but was not able to do so.

After a formal demand for their money the two men put the case in the courts, and a day was set for trial. Alphonse Du Bois learned of the case from his sweetheart, Louise, and the probable loss of her dowry. He told her to say to her father that he would save him from the swindle if he would consent to his marriage with her. Louise gave the old man the message and it made him very angry.

"What!" he exclaimed. "Does this popinjay who has no experience in the law propose to do what I, who have been a notary for forty years, cannot do?"

Louise argued with her father, saying that nothing would be lost by permitting Alphonse to take the case and something might be gained. Since the old man's principal grief was that she would be deprived of her dowry, she finally won him over, but not until the case had been called in court, and if any defense was to be put in it must be done at once. Then the notary, who could see no possible excuse under the contract to avoid indemnifying the plaintiffs, agreed that in case Du Bois saved his fortune it should go to Louise as his bride.

The young lawyer arose in court and called for a reading of the contract. When the reader came to the words, "And the said Farlieux shall pay to the said depositors together and to no one or two separately the sum of 100,000 francs," Du Bois stopped him and said:

"Your honor, my client is ready to pay the 100,000 francs specified under the contract to the three depositors together, but is prohibited by the contract from paying the money to two of them separately."

The judge dismissed the case, for the moment the third man who had gone off with the funds should appear he would be arrested, and the notary need not pay till he was present.

The man who had gone away with the deposit never returned, and the notary was never again called on to pay it. Du Bois married Louise, but declined to permit her to accept the dowry. The reputation he made by his handling of the case in court brought him a practice that eventually made him rich.

When he returns home his father and mother are dead and he is the owner of Halliday House. Dan stays with him after his marriage, indignantly refusing to be set free.

About twenty years later Covington with his passion for cards and the race track, is swindled by two adventurers, Bantree and Daly. Gradually falling into their net Covington places a mortgage on Halliday House and instead of using the money for legitimate purposes, he is persuaded to back certain horses and loses.

Unable to pay the mortgage when it is due, Covington and Miss Carol his granddaughter, are turned out of his home, accompanied by Dan. In New York he finds that there is no place for a Virginia gentleman who has no knowledge of business and no stock in trade. Dan is compelled to leave him and finds work in a gambling house. Covington and his granddaughter are reduced to poverty. She obtains a position where she receives eight dollars a week, the source of their support. It is here that she meets Arthur Lewis, a young lawyer for whom she gradually learns to care and bit by bit he becomes acquainted with the sad family story.

The Colonel retaining his pride refuses assistance especially from a Yankee even when Miss Carol loses her position and they are reduced to standing in the bread line.

It so happens that Bantree has selected Lewis as his attorney placing great confidence in him and leaving a number of important papers in his care. Daly comes to New York and sells Bantree the Halliday house. In a quarrel Bantree kills Daly and insists that Lewis defend him and while looking through his papers, Lewis finds proof of the swindling of Covington and as a fee for defending him exacts the return of the Halliday House to Covington..

The out of town guests present were Joe Cowey and Elwin Shinkle of East Liverpool, O.

Suffrage Gaining

Late returns this afternoon put a different complexion on the suffrage issue in the state and in Westmoreland county. The total vote as given in early editions will be greatly reduced in favor of the amendment. In this county suffragists are claiming a majority of from 500 to 800 votes. Local supporters of the cause appreciate the fact that Monessen voted favorably even by the small margin of 2.

Seriously Injured

In the Charleroi-Monessen hospital in a critical condition from injuries received when run over by a Pittsburgh Railways car is John McCoy, aged 45 years, a miner of Monongahela. In the Memorial hospital at Monongahela, McCoy's wife is in a dying condition. Four children ranging in age from 3 to 11 years are being cared for by brothers and sisters of the woman, little realizing what fate may have in store for them.

The McCoys are Monongahela people. The man is a miner who formerly lived in Midway. After his wife was taken to the hospital at Monongahela Monday, it is stated he took to drinking. The supposition is that he boarded a car in the direction of Charleroi, or else wandered in that direction. At any rate he was lying asleep along the track near Wickerham stop when the 11:15 car came along. An arm was lying on one of the rails. It was crushed and he was otherwise badly hurt.

McCoy was brought to the Monessen-Charleroi hospital where it was found necessary to amputate his arm. He is in a bad condition. Little report was given out concerning the condition of his wife this morning.

WIVES AND MOTHERS

Have you ever stopped to realize how much the health of your family depends upon you? For instance, diet is a great factor in health, and you are responsible for it, then again when any member of your family gets into a run-down condition, when the children are delicate, cross and ailing, when somebody takes cold and develops a cough, they look to you for help. Do you know that our local druggists, the Hirsch Drug Co., have a secret constitutional remedy known as Vinol which they guarantee for just such conditions. Many families in this vicinity have found it so reliable they are never without it.

A Sharp Distinction.

A merited retort is not always a retort courteous. The rebuke that was administered to a party of intruding tourists by the old watchman who was set to guard the ruins of College hall at Wellesley not long after the great fire conveyed a keen but subtle reproach.

"Ye've got to keep out!" he ordered gruffly when he caught them trying to slip under the ropes that surrounded the crumbling walls.

The inquisitive visitors paused and eyed first the ruins and then their determined guardian.

"See here," a callow youth accosted him; "we're willing to risk it, and we'll take all the responsibility. What do you care if we lose our lives?"

"Ye've got to keep out. I ain't thinkin' of your lives; I'm thinkin' of me job."—Youth's Companion.

Nothing to Wear.

There are women who live to dress, and the more frequent and radical the changes are the better they like it. If their pocketbooks can stand it, no great harm is done. But the great majority of women can't afford to keep up with this pace. The result is that some stay at home because their clothes are not in the latest style, many are made unhappy, and others keep up with the procession, it matters not what may be the cost.

If a man can wear the same dress suit for eight or ten years and not look like a freak, why is it not possible to design an evening gown for women that will be in good style as long as it may be worn? It is absurd to hear a woman say, "I haven't a thing to wear," when she may have a half dozen gowns all in good condition.—Frances Frear in Leslie's.

Highland Mary.

Small as is the number of statues of women in Britain, there are two of one woman, concerning whom very little is actually known save that she was of humble origin and was associated with the life of Scotland's greatest poet. Passengers by the Clyde steamboats are familiar with the statue of Mary Campbell, whom Burns immortalized as Highland Mary, which overlooks the pier at Dunoon. There was a good deal of controversy about the memorial at the time of its erection, and the late Mr. Henley referred to it in his famous "Essay on Burns" as a "fantasy in bronze." Liverpool, with which Mary Campbell had no association whatsoever, has also chosen to commemorate her, and a marble statue stands in the palm house at Sefton park, encircled with choicest blooms all the year round.—London Mail.

Early Use of Gunpowder.

Reference is made to the first definite use of gunpowder in battle by Ernest Protheroe in his book, "The British Navy." The author says:

"Of all the world's great battles Crecy possesses a unique interest. The English only used three pieces of field ordnance. They were small cannon made of trees, bored and bound with iron hoops, and the missiles were of stone scarcely larger than cricket balls. Doubtless this rude artillery made far more noise than it effected damage. It was the long bow and the broad sword that won the battle, but nevertheless gunpowder was henceforth to play an ever increasing part in the strife of nations. Explosives wrought a vast change in fighting methods on land, for many of the old time weapons were rendered quite useless in face of death dealing ball and shot. Warfare afloat, too, would be revolutionized. Hitherto the fighting ships had been largely carriers of soldiers in order to board and fight as on land, whereas the time was at hand when ships could be riddled with cannon balls without the crews coming into actual contact."

Cause and Effect.

"Miss Dawker," said Professor Jobling with a hesitant manner, "a psychic impulse prompts me to ask you if you will be my wife."

"Something of the same sort struck Mr. Bilkins last night, professor, and the recoil prompted me to say 'Yes.'"—Baltimore Sun.
